In 2002 the final phase contract for conservation and repair of historic fabric and internal finishes to Compton Verney, Warwickshire, the grade one listed house designed by Robert Adam in the 1790's started. Cornerstone Conservation, undertook a two year program of works in conjunction with the conversion of this major country house into an art gallery.

The project planning was critical as the works are mostly concealed under the modern de-mountable fabric. The £24 million pound project was phased over five years and included a new extension for the world famous collections of art and sculpture

The work was completed in 2004 and has since won the RIBA award for conservation 2005.
